A GIFT FROM ONLY LOVE ANIMAL COMMUNICATION

Your Pet Is Still Here

Seven quiet signs that the one you love is at peace.

Written by Donna Rosenthal, a licensed clinical psychotherapist of twenty-five years, and a lifelong animal communicator.

If you are reading this, you are missing someone. I am so sorry. And I want you to know something that twenty-five years of listening has taught me: the bond does not end. It only changes how it speaks.

Grief can make us doubt what we feel. So here are seven of the ways your animal may be letting you know they are at peace. None of this is something you have to believe. Just read it gently, and see what lands.

i. You feel them near in the ordinary moments

Not in a dramatic way. In the quiet ones. The corner of the couch, the sound at the door, the walk you always took. A sense that they are simply there. That feeling is not your mind playing tricks. It is the bond, still humming.

ii. A sudden warmth, or an unexplained calm

Many people describe a wave of peace that arrives out of nowhere, often when the grief has been heaviest. Animals who are at peace often want, more than anything, for you to be at peace too. That calm is frequently them.

iii. Small signs in the world

A feather where there should not be one. Their song on the radio. A visit from an animal that reminds you of them. We are taught to call these coincidences. You are allowed to call them hello.

iv. Dreams that feel more real than dreams

A dream where you can feel their fur, hear them, hold them, and wake up sure it was more than a dream. These visits are one of the most common ways animals reach us. They tend to leave you feeling lighter, not heavier.

v. The other animals in your home seem to sense something

A dog who watches an empty doorway. A cat who settles in a spot they never used before. The animals still with you often perceive far more than we do. If they seem at ease, that is worth trusting.

vi. A weight beginning to lift, even inside the grief

Not forgetting. Never that. But a softening, a breath that comes a little easier. When an animal has truly crossed into peace, that peace has a way of reaching back toward the person they loved.

vii. The love has not gone anywhere

This is the truest sign of all. The love you feel for them, and the love they had for you, did not end when their body did. Love is the one thing that crosses over intact. If you can still feel it, they are still here.

If you want to listen more deeply, I am here.

Sometimes reading the signs is enough. And sometimes the heart wants more, a real conversation, to hear what they want you to know, to ask the question you have been carrying. That is the work I do, gently and honestly, from wherever you are in the world.

There is never any pressure. Whenever, or if ever, you are ready, you will know where to find me.
